Replacement Windows Made for Utah's Demanding Climate

The National Fenestration Rating Council (NFRC) provides certified ratings based on performance criterion that varies by each distinct climate zone in the US. The State of Utah is located within the Northern climate zone, with the exception of Washington County, which is located in the South-Central climate zone. Advanced Windows provides the following ratings for windows manufactured here in the state of Utah:

- The rate of heat transfer is called the U-factor. This determines how effective a window will stop the escape of heat from the interior of your home. The U-factor rating to look for if you live in Northern or Central Utah will be less than 0.27 for windows. Washington County residents require 0.30 or less.
- Solar heat gain coefficient or SHGC provides consumers with a rating to show the increased thermal energy from solar radiation absorbed through the window. The SHGC performance rating for the Northern climate zone does not have requirements, but the SHGC rating for the South-Central climate zone should be at or below 0.25.
