Time for Window Replacement

It can be tough to know whether it's best to replace all your windows when just a few are starting to look shabby. But there are some fairly common signs you can keep an eye out for to know when it's time to replace your windows. These include:

- Feeling a breeze when you sit close to a window, which can indicate the frame has shrunk enough to allow air to flow around the window.
- Cold air radiating through the window, which can be a sign of poor insulation.
- Visible signs of damage, including cracks, warping, and chipped paint.
- Windows that have just survived a natural disaster, including hurricane, tornado, fire, or flood.
- Windows that just don't match the look and feel of a historic home.

By replacing these windows, you'll give your home both a visual and a functional makeover. Installing new energy-efficient windows can lower your utility bills and significantly boost your home's curb appeal.
